bers of the national committee over racial policies. His foes charge he has missed most committee meetings, and the record shows he has attended three of eight meetings during his tenure.

HE REPLIES THAT he has sent representatives to committee sessions he has missed, including state party Chairman Roy Mayhall and Clifford Fulford, coordinator for the present slate of pledged electors.

Weeks argues that Alabama hasn't been adequately represented on the national committee for the past four years, and needs a stronger voice in party affairs.

Barker's campaigning around the state consisted largely of handshaking tours in population centers such as Birmingham, Montgomery and Mobile.

"I'll work for whoever is nominated for president," he pledged, "Whether it is George Wallace or Lyndon Johnson."

Mrs. Ruth Johnson Owens is unopposed for Democratic national committeewoman.

records. Owen cites 17 consecutive years on the commission. Connor and Folsom cite records as public officials. But neither has had a day at APSC headquarters.

Connor appears to have done a hard job of campaigning. They say, too, that he has probably called on more people than any of the other candidates.

They say Connor also has reason to be active not only because he is running for Owen's job on the commission but he also is running for re-election as Democratic national committeeman. Of course, Folsom is also running for the national committee spot.

Whether or not there will be a run-off is a question that has been raised since the campaign opened. It appears experts are evenly divided on that point.
