2. Health Source-Consumer Edition
3. PubMed.gov
4. Medline Plus

World Wide Web

1. www.google.com
2. Type in search terms
3. Choose credible websites for your information.

Website Evaluation

1. Is the author of the webpage an authority in the area of which they are writing?
2. Is the content of the web site based on the author's biases or prejudices?
3. Is the information on the website current?
4. Are there any links to other websites which support the author's view?
5. Is the website misleading?

HELPFUL TIPS!

1. Look at the URL address of the website. Addresses ending in .gov, .mil, .us and state abbreviations are reliable.
2. URLs containing tildes (~) usually mean that an individual published this site.
3. Check the publication date.
4. Figure out the site's purpose.
5. Check out contact information and resources.
6. Decide if article is describing facts or author's opinions.
7. Advertising—Many websites are infomercials aimed at getting you to buy a product or service.
8. Evidence—Will the information stand up to the tests of print evaluation.
